TOLD UNDER THE DOME

BY ARTHUR WALLACE DUNN

SEVERAL years ago General Leonard Wood, a former surgeon, was commanding the army in the Philippines, and General John F. Weston, a former commissary, was the next ranking officer, and commanded the Department of Luzon. In those days, as always, there were experiments going on in the army, and one of the most disagreeable was an addition to the weight of the equipment of each soldier in the shape of a package of "first aid to the injured," a sort of amateur surgeon's kit, and also an "emergency ration," to be used only in case the soldier was far from supplies.

One of the younger officers, who knew General Weston quite well, made a protest. "See here, General!" he said. "This addition to the equipment of the men in this hot climate is all wrong. We ought to make it lighter, instead of heavier. Besides, there is not one man of a thousand in a whole year who will want either the 'first aid to the injured' or the 'emergency ration.'"

"You are absolutely right about it, my son," replied Weston; "but, as long as there is a doctor at the head of the division, and a commissary at the head of the department, you won't make any headway complaining about extra medical supplies and rations."

PROFESSOR O. H. TITTMANN, chief of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has a picture that has a history. It was painted years ago by a young man who was on a surveying trip with Tittmann in the West. It is crude in the extreme, the daub of an amateur; but Tittmann kept it because it represented a scene in the mountains of which he was very fond.

A short time ago the painter, now a famous artist living in Paris, was in Washington, and Tittmann told him of the picture. The artist asked to see it, and it was brought from a storage room. After gazing at it for a few moments, the artist said:

"That has merit. I am not ashamed of it as an early effort. I'll put my name to it." And he did.

"As it has the indorsement of one of the great artists of the day, I can afford to have it in my room," remarked Tittmann apologetically.

PROFESSOR WILLIS MOORE, chief of the Weather Bureau, enjoys a joke on himself as well as when it is on the other fellow, and tells with new appreciation of an encounter he had with an umbrella-mender in a small town in Illinois. Having an hour to while away till traintime, Mr. Moore strolled down the street and, passing a battered and seedy looking fellow mending umbrellas, stopped to chat with him. The talk turned on politics, and the old fellow proved to be an ardent Bryanite. Quite a crowd collected as the discussion went on, and several times in the sallies and retorts that passed between them Mr. Moore got the laugh on the umbrella mender.

It was a cold, raw day, "and suddenly," said Mr. Moore, "the thought came to me, 'Here am I, well clothed, well fed, prosperous, making sport out of this poor old derelict for a lot of idle bystanders!'" And he began to think how he could square himself. Remembering that there was a little rip in his umbrella, he asked if it could be repaired. Without a word the man took it, threaded his needle, and, taking the few necessary stitches, handed it back.

"How much?" asked Moore, knowing that the job was worth not more than a nickel.

"Twenty-five cents," replied the man, looking him squarely in the eye.

Smilingly Moore went into his pocket and handed out the quarter, saying good humorously, "You made a mistake, my man; you could have got seventy-five cents out of me as easily as twenty-five."

The umbrella mender silently looked him over from head to toe; then, turning to the crowd impressively, "I've traveled from New York to San Francisco, and from Mobile to Duluth, and I know a seventy-five-cent gent when I see him."

ONLY those who recall that the political differences between Senator Bailey of Texas and William J. Bryan of Nebraska are as wide as the ocean, and that their personal relations have never been agreeable, can fully appreciate this story. It may be added that these differences began as far back as 1896, when Bailey held the Texas delegation away from Bryan when it was a foregone conclusion that the Nebraska man was to be nominated for President. Both were young and aspiring Democrats, and reminded one of Shakespeare's remark about there being no room for two Harrys in England.

When the magazine publishers were making the fight against the increase of the rate on second class mail at the close of the Sixty-first Congress, a delegation representing the allied printing trades went to see a number of Senators to interest them against the proposed increase. They were armed with various statements and telegrams, among them a despatch from William J. Bryan protesting against the increase. They opened the discussion with Senator Bailey by reading the Bryan telegram. The effect was electrical. The Texas Senator does not make any great effort to control his temper, especially where his political enemies are involved. That delegation never understood just what happened; but it was "a plenty."

"I have been around composing rooms, pressrooms, and all other places in a printing establishment when things were going wrong, and heard language used," remarked one of the delegation; "but that Texas Senator's got 'em all on the run. Say, he's got some vocabulary, that man!"

JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS (he ought not to need an introduction) was once a Congressman from Washington State, a Colonel in the Spanish War, afterward a city attorney of Chicago, and a well known Democratic politician, celebrated far and wide for his wit and whiskers. The latter are beautiful, sun-kissed adornments, which have won fame among humorists and admirers at home and abroad.

Colonel Lewis in making political speeches—and he is an ever ready talker—sometimes alludes to his whiskers. "My opponents," he would say, "accuse me of dyeing my whiskers. Do you believe, Gentlemen, that if I dyed my whiskers I should dye them this color?"

And the Colonel would stroke his pink whiskers lovingly. He never fails to make a hit with this one.

OF less fame is Frank Eddy of Minnesota, although he had a record in his day. He was voted without question to be the ugliest looking man in the House of Representatives, and that in a body which is nobody's prize beauty show.

Eddy was making a campaign for Governor of the State, and had been accused of many political derelictions. "I am accused of a great many things by my political opponents," he said. "They say I am two-faced. Great God! do you suppose that if I had another face I'd wear this one?"

THE KEEN SIGHTED GULL

THERE is perhaps no other bird, of land or sea, so keen of sight as the common gull. To convince a skeptical friend of this, an American naturalist once made some interesting experiments.

The two men were passengers on a steamer where the spring tide aided them to run twenty miles an hour. A dozen gulls followed them in the steamer's wake, without apparent effort, and circled in graceful curves over the water.

Breaking a cracker biscuit into four parts, less than an inch square each, the naturalist handed one piece to his friend, and told him to drop it into the seething waters on the starboard.

Immediately the bit of biscuit became invisible to human eyes, and yet before it had gone thirty yards astern a gull detected it, and dipping into the foam, secured it. One by one it picked up the other bits of biscuit, though neither of the two men could see them.

Tearing off a postage stamp from an old envelop, the naturalist dropped it overboard. The gull detected the waif and made as if to pick it up. But when within a yard or so of it the bird saw that it was nothing in his line, and glided upward again to his favorite station on a line with the topmost truck.
